Alexander Graham Bell was born in Scotland in 1847. As a boy, he was interested in sound because of his family. His mother was a musician but was deaf (hearing impaired). His father taught deaf people to speak. When Alexander was 23, the Bells decided to move to the United States. While they were living in Boston, Alexander started a school for the deaf and then became a professor at Boston university. While he was teaching, he met Mabel Hubbard, one of his deaf students. Bell married Mabel five years later.

Bell loved to invent things. One day, he got an idea. He thought: I can use electricity to send the human voice from one place to another. He started to work on this idea with his assistant Thomas Watson. They rented rooms in a house. Bell was on one floor and Watson on another. They tried to send words to each other. One day Bell was working on the invention when he spilled some acid on his clothes. Watson suddenly heard the words: "Mr. Watson, come here. I want you" and ran to Bell's room. It was March 19, 1876, and these became the memorable words of the world's first telephone call.

Bell soon became very wealthy but continued to teach the deaf to speak. He also started the National Geographic magazine because he believed the best way to learn was through pictures.
